Planning ahead is a challenge for many young students

Your child can't do his or her homework if they left the book they need at school. They can't turn in homework if it's ... well, who knows exactly where it is?

Parents know that young children can have a very hard time planning ahead. Here are three reasons why— and what you can do about each.

Most kids:

- Have difficulty resisting the temptation to do something fun instead of something hard. Make a simple rule: No TV or games until homework is finished.
- Lack organization skills. Show your child how to use a calendar to track her assignments, test dates and activities. Establish a "launch pad" where backpacks "live" and where homework is placed once it's completed.
- Have very little sense of time. Often, they really do think that one day is enough time to finish that big project. Help your child break big projects down into smaller steps.
