

Character: The doctor

Description The doctor is a moderately prosperous white man who does not wish to help anyone that doesn't have money. He generally only helps white people because they have the money to pay, and ignores the natives of La Paz because they are poor. He isn't moved at all by the suffering of others and couldn't care less if one of his patients died.	Visual/Symbol (with explanation)  I drew a symbol of a gallows with a money bag hanging from a noose to represent the doctor. The doctor is so greedy for money that he was even willing to put Coyotito's life at risk by poisoning him just so he could "cure him" in order to collect a paycheck when Kino sold the pearl. Coyotito could have easily died, but this fact didn't seem to bother the doctor at all.
Quote from text (with explanation) "Have I nothing better to do than cure insect bites for 'little Indians'? I'm a doctor, not a veterinary" (11). I picked this quote to represent the doctor because it shows two of his personality traits. First, it shows his greed because the first thing he wanted to know when he found out a baby, who could have easily died, was stung by a scorpion, was whether or not he would be paid for his services. Second, it shows his racism. He did not view the natives of La Paz as people because they were not white. He viewed them as animals.	Text to Text Connection The doctor reminds me of Macbeth from Macbeth. The doctor risked Coyotito's life in order to make money. He was greedy and selfish and didn't care if he accidentally killed a helpless baby. Macbeth was greedy and selfish as well. He killed King Duncan in order to take his place as king, and also killed many people after him in order to keep it. Both men were not worried about hurting others in order to get what they wanted.
